26/11 EVENT AT THE GATEWAY OF INDIA:

Every year, HCCD Mumbai organizes a commemorative event at the Gateway of India on 26th November. We have been having this event at the Gateway of India from where we send a message of peace to the entire world. This is a solemn event to pay tribute to all those who lost their lives in these dastardly acts of terrorism those days in 2008.

This event is normally held with the cooperation of Rotary District 3141 and the Career Diplomats.

We had the Union Minister, Mr. Piyush Goyal, as our Chief Guest, along with Mrs. Amruta Fadnavis, wife of our Chief Minister as our Guests of Honour.

This year, we also supported one Wing Commander Paramvir Singh, who requested us to include him as a part of our team, as he also wished, in his own way, to spread the message of peace and goodwill to the world. He holds the world record of the longest swim of over 400 kms. He wanted to spread the message of peace by beating his own record and swimming a distance of over 1000 kms to Mangalore.

His feat has made it to the World Records in Open Water Swimming namely 'Longest Distance Open Water Swim by a team of six. The Swimming Federation of India, which governs the sport in India, has already declared the above two World Records.

COMOROS AT A GLANCE

Comoros is an archipelago consisting of following four islands:

1. NGAZIDJA
2. ANJOUAN
3. MWALI
4. MAYOTTE

It is believed that the word Comoros is derived from the Arabic word "Qamar" which means moon in Arabic.

This is a small country in the South West Indian ocean with Madagascar on one side, and East African States like Tanzania, Mozambique on the other. Its population, which is overwhelmingly Islamic, is around 750 thousand. Historically, Comoros attracted migrants from Africa, the Persian Gulf, Madagascar, Indonesia, etc. The population of Comoros is therefore of diverse stock, and this probably accounts for the highly tolerant spirit of the Comorians. Comoros began attracting attention from the British and the French during the 19th century owing to its strategic location. Until the opening of the Suez Canal, Comoros used to be an important refueling and provisioning station for ships sailing from Europe to the Indian Ocean.

During the 19th century, in the tussle for supremacy between the French and the British in Africa and Asia, the French won in Comoros through generous payments and playing one faction against the other. It was in 1886 that Comoros became a French protectorate by an agreement signed between Said Ali bin Said Omar, the last Sultan of Grand Comore (the largest island in Comoros), and the French government. The French rule continued until modern times. In the recent past, however, Comoros also has had some association with the British. During the Second World War, for a period of four years from 25th September, 1942 to 13th October, 1946, it was under British occupation.

Subsequently, Comoros attained independence through a unilateral proclamation of independence on 6th July, 1975. Notably, it was not preceded by any violent agitation against France as was witnessed in some former French colonies like Algeria. However, Mayotte, the easternmost of the four islands of Comoros remained a French protectorate. The residents of this small island had also subsequently shown their preference to be under the French rule in two referendums in 1974 and 1976.

As is to be expected, like other Francophone countries, French is the official language of Comoros. It is widely understood and English is hardly spoken there. Comoros has a democratic government with elections held every five years. The constituent islands of Comoros enjoy considerable autonomy and are headed by an elected Governor.

Unfortunately, not many people from India have ever visited Comoros; this is why it is not generally known that Comoros is a country with great scenic beauty and hence ideal for tourism. The long, pristine beaches and surrounding seas provide an excellent opportunity for various water sports showcasing the amazing pristine beauty of Comoros. It attracts a large number of tourists especially from Europe. The country has excellent connectivity by air and one can travel there from various locations such as Dubai, Madagascar, Kenya, Yemen, etc. It has a tropical climate similar to that in Mumbai or Chennai, and receives heavy showers during the rainy season.

As far as agriculture is concerned, it mainly produces vanilla, cloves and a flower called Ylang-ylang from which perfume is extracted. It is one of the largest producers of vanilla and the second largest producers of cloves in the world; notably, India happens to be a major importer of Comorian cloves. However, with the focus on cash crops like cloves, vanilla and Ylang-ylang, there has not been adequate cultivation of food grains, vegetables, etc. This is why Comoros is required to import most of its requirements of cereals, meat, vegetables, etc.

In the short history of Comoros, the period of last 10-15 years can indeed be counted as a golden period. There has been political stability all along. Turning now to the foreign relations of Comoros: Comoros has resident missions from a few countries that include China, France, Saudi Arabia, Iran, etc. Similarly, Comoros has resident missions only in some selected countries such as the U.S.A., France, Belgium, Iran, Saudi Arabia, the UAE, Egypt, Libya, Madagascar, Senegal, South Africa, etc. Comoros is a member of the United Nations, the African Union, the Arab League, the Indian Ocean Commission (IOC), etc.

A distinctive and laudable feature of the foreign relations of Comoros must be mentioned here. Comoros has no unresolved issues, whether relating to maritime boundary or any other matter, with other African states.

Turning now to the interaction between India and Comoros: I would not be exaggerating if I were to say that Indo-Comorian relations were almost non-existent earlier. Historically, there were no contacts between Comoros and India, and the same situation continued after Comoros attained independence in the year 1975. No students from Comoros came to India, nor had it occurred to anyone there that India could be an excellent destination for advanced medical treatment. Comoros was not on the radar of India at all, and by and large, nobody in India (except the personnel of Africa Division in the M.E.A.) had even heard of it. Hardly anybody from India ever went to Comoros, and it was not on even the radar of travel agents. Similarly, India was totally unknown in Comoros; for Comorians, it was some country far away and remote and they had nothing to do with it. Being a French speaking country, an almost insurmountable barrier existed in the way of people-to-people contacts between the two countries.

Comoros never had a resident Indian Embassy and our embassy in Madagascar looked after it. The Indian Ambassador in Madagascar used to visit Comoros once in six months or so and stay there for a couple of days. Thus, contacts at the diplomatic level were most sporadic. I was appointed to be the Consul General (Hon.) in India for this country; and it was my job to foster the relationship between these two countries and to acquaint them with each other. This would have been a formidable task even for a seasoned diplomat, and I was a total stranger to the field of diplomacy. However, due to many lucky factors and cooperation of my friends, especially in the Ministry of External Affairs, Delhi, during the last 10 years, much has changed as far as Indo-Comorian relations are concerned. India and Comoros have become close and there is no more discord between them politically. In fact, they have been actively cooperating to mutual benefit. There has been a significant growth of cooperation in various sectors between them. No doubt the credit for this has to go to the political stability enjoyed by Comoros during the last decade, and to the enlightened policies followed by its Government. In the following chapters I have described how India and Comoros have moved closer to each other in the last decade.

GORILLAS IN THE FORESTS OF RWANDA

The population of Gorillas has been shrinking gradually in African forests; and if at all they are to be found, their existence is in the forests of Rwanda. As per the recent census, Rwanda has 304 gorillas, representing 35% of the entire world's population. The Government of Rwanda has taken up the task of protecting the Gorillas very seriously. They have started a programme known as "KWITA IZINA" in local language (Gorilla Naming Ceremony) in the year 2005. The Gorilla naming ceremony is done with international collaboration by inviting the Prime Ministers, Presidents of different countries, Hollywood actors, VVIP's from all over the world every year. More than 200 Gorillas have been named so far. The newly named babies bring the total number of the gorillas named to 283 since 2005. Various cultural events, activities, workshops, seminars and rally on awareness of Gorillas are carried out during the Gorilla Naming Ceremony celebrations.

Giving accreditation to Gorilla as National animal, putting the naming ceremony of Gorillas on the International platform was done with a concern on environmental protection; the intention is also to promote international trade. Gorillas have been the major cause in contributing significant amount to the economic advancement of Rwanda. A large number of foreign tourists arrive here to see the gorillas. After the commencement of the naming ceremony this proportion has grown in the past five years.
